A Child Shall Lead Them: Lessons About Hope from Children With Cancer

By Diane M. Komp

Why has the death rate from adult cancer only dropped by 5% during the time that children have improved by 57%? If I were an adult with cancer, I'd want to know the children's secrets. Physician-author Diane Komp uses tender stories of her work with children to show how medicine, science and spirituality are compatible. The Yale medical professor shatters myths and teaches us how to beat the odds. Woven throughout this tender memoir is the story of an extraordinary baby her doctor named "Crumb Bunny," who beat the odds. So can you!

Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Komp, a pediatric oncologist at the Yale School of Medicine, follows her book about children facing death, A Window to Heaven, with this floridly inspirational collection of essay/stories about young cancer patients. Taking one day at a time makes child patients wiser than adults, according to Komp. Among her most dramatic cases are those patients requiring lengthy waits for donor cellular material followed by a delicate transplant procedure--like Crumb-bunny, the mortally ill baby to whom Komp addresses the letters that begin each chapter. Children, the author notes, depict and fight illness through personalized, storybook terms (pain is colored red, for example), with God an equally real presence. Komp stresses that she writes from the "point of view of a seasoned pediatrician and a faithful Christian," and as such is a strong believer in both treatment and prayer--the "interactions of body and soul." $25,000 ad/promo.
