Editorial Review

From Publishers Weekly

Aiken's 1968 collection of eight tales, A Necklace of Raindrops and Other Stories, infused with magic (such as flying carpets, an oversize cat and a house that rests "on one leg") returns with more than 60 new b&w illustrations by Kevin Hawkes.

Gr. 4-6, younger for reading aloud. The pleasure of seeing this excellent short-story collection back in print is heightened by the addition of Kevin Hawkes' new black-and-white artwork. Many of the drawings are strongly reminiscent of Wanda Gag's illustration. In fact, the publishers' note on Hawkes mentions that he created these pictures "in the tradition of The Story of Ferdinand and Millions of Cats." A typical double-page spread includes one or two drawings, well-shaded, rounded, and full of lively details. Combining elements of folklore with her own inventive touches, Aiken transports readers to places where tigers talk to little girls; people travel by trains, flying carpets, and even flying pies; and magic has a way of bringing justice to the world. With its fine-tuned combination of folklore and fun, this collection is a good source of imaginative tales to read alone or aloud. Carolyn Phelan

The flight of imagination is delicately captured in Jan Pienkowski's accompanying silhouettes" -- Julia Eccleshare Guardian "A Necklace of Raindrops is something that should be on every child's shelf" -- Amanda Craig The Times "A little dark and often surreal" -- Lydia Fulton Financial Times "Jan Pienkowski, whose magical silhouettes were never so finely matched as with the wonderful Joan Aiken's fine short stories ... A treat" Evening Standard
