Environmental Policy in New Zealand: The Politics of Clean and Green? (Oxford Readings in New Zealand Politics) By Ton Bührs, Robert V. Bartlett

Since the mid 1980s, environmental policy has had an especially high profile in New Zealand politics. New Zealand has taken the initiative in promoting strong measures that deal with global warming, nuclear issues, ozone depletion, driftnet fishing, and the protection of Antarctica. This book provides the first systematic and critical analysis of environmental policy in New Zealand based on concepts and theories from the fields of environmental politics research and public policy studies. It assesses the strengths and weaknesses of New Zealand's environmental policies with respect to four recurring themes: the need for anticipatory policy making; the need to change our ways; the need for institutional reform to enhance policy performance; and the need for more integrated and comprehensive policy. Given that New Zealand is a widely perceived and self-promoted "clean and green" country, its environmental policies are of special international significance and interest.

Editorial Review

Review

`As the first comprehensive scholarly analysis of the enormous, recently implemented changes in New Zealand's environmental policymaking Environmental Policy in New Zealand is a valuable case study for both "down under" and "up over" students of natural resource policy ... an intelligent, carefully researched, and lucidly written survey of New Zealand's environmental policy history and recent institutional reconfigurations.'

Ecology Law Quarterly

`This book is a useful briefing on New Zealand environmental policy.'

Environmental Politics

`This book provides a scholarly description and assessment of environmental policy in New Zealand, over the 1984-91 period, from a public policy perspective ... a solid, perceptive analysis that puts NZ's environmental management firmly in the context of developments in the political economy of public policy. As such it deserves serious attention ... the book makes an important contribution to the debate on the pressures, demands and agendas of policy evolution.'
